Professor of Architecture, Texas Tech University

Brief Statement of Interest:

Architecture is both creativity and research ... tradition and innovation. I consider architecture as a creative field that is informed by scholarly inquiry. While the shape of research can vary, it is only useful when collated, packaged, discussed, and distributed. Application of research is in the design moves of architects and designers. ARCC has made great strides in focusing on the research arm of architecture: its conferences, journal and awards are becoming more prestigious and relevant every day. I am proud of my role in this, especially as its treasurer, and most recently, the co-chair of its 2023 international conference in Dallas, TX.
